SUSTAINABILITY AND ESG MANAGEMENT

Taking responsibility

Sustainability and ESG (environmental, social and governance) management is a hot topic in integrated management systems. More and more laws are being passed around the world that oblige organizations to show their performance in certain sustainable areas and thus to assume more responsibility along the entire value chain.

As a result, consumers, business partners and investors are demanding more transparency regarding non-financial information. Organizations that want to expand or maintain their market position should therefore consider the potential impact of their own activities on the environment and society.

CONSTRUCTION

PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION

Quality management in construction has become an absolutely essential requirement.

It can no longer be reduced to quality assurance alone, but also includes environmental and occupational safety requirements, which have long been standard industry practice in a process-orientated 'Integrated Management System (IMS)' Nearly all medium sized construction companies and particularly large enterprises are already engaged in the further development of their Integrated Management System by supplementing it with requirements from risk management (ISO 31000 or ÖNORM D 4901), compliance management (ISO 37301), anti-corruption management (ISO 37001) and information security management (ISO 27001).

Quality management as a strategic success factor is becoming more and more important in public administration. The decisionmakers in politics and administration have realized the enormous opportunities yielded by modern quality management systems for a long time.

Nowadays public administrations like using quality management systems – above all ISO 9001 – as extremely helpful implementation tools. Also, further development towards integrated management systems and particularly dealing with the environmental management system acc. to ISO 14001 are becoming more important. Many organizations supplement their integrated management systems primarily with requirements from risk management (ISO 31000 or ÖNORM D 4901), compliance management (ISO 37301) and anti-corruption management (ISO 37001).

AN EFFICIENT TRAINING OPTION

One of the most efficient training options is inhouse learning, i.e. learning amidst colleagues and leaders and managers, by having a look at topical case studies from one's own industry.

COST BENEFITS AND FLEXIBILITY

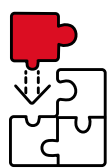

All public qualityaustria trainings can be booked as inhouse trainings. This results in cost-saving potentials due to the elimination of travelling expenses, external locations, catering, etc. It also is possible to book single modules of courses as inhouse trainings. This means that every qualityaustria inhouse training is carried out specifically for your organization.

SPOT ON

“An inhouse training can be compared to a personal training: an individual training on many different levels. Suitable trainers are specially selected – not only to provide optimal training on the desired theoretical topics, but also to ensure that the background expertise and personality of the trainers match the corporate culture and next stage of development of the customer. Your defined individual goals can thus be achieved more efficiently and the inhouse training with your ‘personal coach’ provides you with significant support in this regard.”

Elisabeth Tucek
trainer
